On behalf of the Asian Studies Development Program, a partnership between the East-West Center[1] and the University of Hawaii, I am pleased to invite you to participate in the Teaching about China and the United States international exchange program, June 28-July 19, 2004. Dr. Elizabeth Buck, Special Assistant to the President for Education, Professor Roger Ames, Professor of Comparative Philosophy at the University of Hawaii, and Professor Liu Qingguo, Professor of International Relations at Peking University, are co-directors of the Institute, with Sigfried Ramler as Institute Coordinator.

purpose of conference

The purpose of this program is to have Chinese and American faculty explore common issues during a three-week program to improve teaching about the U. S. and China. After several days of orientation[2] at Peking University for both groups of faculty, Chinese participants will visit the United States, especially, Washington, D.C. and Youngstown, Ohio, while the Americans travel to Xian and Shanghai. At the conclusion, participants will meet in Honolulu for a final program and presentations.

During your travel in the United States, there will be meetings and briefings with state and federal officials, journalists, business experts, and other professionals to provide a general overview of the United States.
